Directions (1-7): Read the passage and answer the questions that follow.

Mountaineering is the backbone of Nepal's tourism industry, and the driving force of mountaineering is a mountaineer. The exact number of people actively involved in mountaineering is not available.

However, the Nepal Mountaineering Association (NMA) has listed more than 10,000 mountaineers as Sardar, support climber or senior support climber. The International Federation of Mountain Guides Associations has recognized 65 Nepali guides. It is ironic that despite Nepal being home to eight of the 14 mountains above 8,000 metres and more than 414 other peaks, an in-depth study of the health of mountaineers, causes of death and training still has not been done. (Stakeholders make periodic (A) remarks about the importance of mountaineers in mountain tourism, but lack of vital information about them creates an impetus (B) to formulating a strategy that will insecure (C) their profession and future).

Mountaineers remain on empty stomachs for long hours on the mountains. After climbing, foreign mountaineers consume a balanced diet to prevent vital mineral deficiency in their bodies. Nepal's mountaineers consume a traditional diet and don't feel it necessary to take diet supplements to deal with vitamin deficiency. We have no tradition of going for a check-up at the doctor after returning from a mountaineering expedition. I have seen that some mountaineers just returned from an expedition have hearing problems or suffer from gastritis or headache; but they do not try to seek treatment and continue with their lives as before.

Health problems that are only diagnosed late in life can end in untimely death, leaving family and children helpless. The mountaineering profession is bread and butter for most of Nepal's mountaineering community; they may not have a high income or are not well informed about going for necessary medical check-ups after their return.

The Department of Tourism should establish a separate department for mountaineers at subsidized cost or no cost in selected hospitals to educate them about the food they should consume before, during and after mountaineering. Regular health assessments after mountaineering will help discover health issues for a timely cure. Till about three decades ago, most people in Kathmandu followed their ancestral professions like goldsmith, merchant, carpenter or farmer. But now, the picture is different as most children are focused on getting a job in a national or international organisation for survival. This trend is seen in most traditional professions all over the country. For example, carpenters have not been able to progress into mass production of furniture for export. We can still find people producing traditional windows or doors made by hand, which limits their production scale. In comparison, we can find different sophisticated tools being used in crafting wood in foreign countries, increasing the number of products greatly. Lack of entrepreneurship is the result of the education system. The theory-based education system does not allow us to think about our profession practically and differently, but motivates us to lead our life by performing 10 to 5 duties. This is the social structure in which we live. Therefore, mountaineering professionals cannot remain indifferent to this. In addition, the risk factor involved in this profession is another reason why mountaineers do not want their children to follow in their footsteps.

- B. Nepal climbers consume traditional diet and lack necessary vitamins and minerals, whereas foreign climbers consume balanced diet
- C. Nepal climbers consume packed or ready to eat food, whereas foreign climbers consume balanced diet.
- D. Nepal climbers consume lesser number of calories all day during the Hike, whereas foreign climbers consume 8000- 10000 calories in a day.
- E. None of these

- C. To educate the mountaineers, a campaign should be launched with free health check up
- D. To provide awareness for diet plan in Mountaineering a separate Department in hospital should be formed and regular health checkup facilities should be there.
- E. None of these

4. Why is it said that “mountaineering professionals cannot remain indifferent to this”?

- A. Like other professions have their Successors, mountaineering too has them.
